

Bosch Appoints Four Regional Sales Managers

May 26, 2009

Fairport, N.Y. – Bosch Security Systems, Inc., a full-line manufacturer of high-quality security solutions, has appointed four sales managers for various regions within the United States. The sales representatives are responsible for working closely with Bosch dealers and integrators located in their designated areas to help these customers win, support and maintain top quality security installations.

Lloyd Apricio handles sales of the Intrusion, Fire and Access Control/Systems (IFAS) portfolios in the Southwest, including Utah, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Southern Nevada and Wyoming. Throughout Apricio's 22 years in the industry, he has worked for both manufacturers and security integrators. This well-rounded experience gives him substantial knowledge of system design and the needs and requirements of both end users and security dealers and integrators.

Holley Hunt manages sales of the IFAS portfolios in Southern California. Hunt is an expert in access control systems having sold and trained customers in the technology for more than 10 years. She currently serves on the board of the Inland Empire Alarm Association, an organization dedicated to supporting alarm companies in combating non-response policies of local law enforcement agencies. Hunt brings extensive experience working with senior level decision makers in the industry and is known for exceeding customer expectations for superior service and support.

Joe Scardino holds responsibility for the IFAS portfolios in the New York Metro region. Scardino joins the company with 28 years of industry experience and in-depth knowledge of the Bosch product portfolio. He chose Bosch for the strength of the portfolio and the positive reputation of the company's products.

Mark Land now manages sales of Bosch video surveillance products and systems in Central/Eastern Ohio, including the metropolitan areas of Akron, Canton, Cleveland and Columbus. Land previously held the position of Key Account Manager for Bosch, in which he developed expertise across Bosch's broad range of products and systems. He joined the company in 1985 and has 28 total years of experience in the security industry.
